Twice baked. For the first time in 20 years, the MassCann Freedom Rally expanded to a two-day festival on the Common. No sparks. Despite a rift over permits with the city, which resulted in a court injunction, organizers of the annual pro-marijuana rally said the event was a "tremendous success." Coakley to launch run for governor

Attorney General Martha Coakley, who has spent the past three years working to rebuild her political brand after losing a race for U.S. Senate to Scott Brown, will announce today that she'll be a candidate for governor in 2014, according to a top political aide.

Coakley was expected to release an announcement video early this morning followed by a day with six campaign kickoff events starting in her hometown of Medford. SHNS

Massachusetts Car-Free Week — an extension of World Car-Free Day — begins today and runs through Sunday.

The event promotes public transit, bicycling, walking, carpooling, vanpooling and teleworking as greener modes of transportation.

Gov. Deval Patrick was expected to walk from Fields Corner Station to Harbor Pilot School in Dorchester this morning in recognition of the fume-free event. METRO

Freedom Rally holds two-day pot festival

Hempfest. For the first time, the pro-marijuana group was able to hold a weekend-long festival.

Despite thinner-than-usual crowds on Sunday and permitting issues, organizers of the pro-marijuana Freedom Rally on Boston Common said the two-day version of the event was a "tremendous success."

The 24th annual Freedom Rally, put on by the Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Coalition, was held over two days for the first time.

It almost didn't happen that way after the city parks department issued MassCann a one-day event permit.

However, after a court request seeking an injunction, a judge allowed MassCann to put on the two-day festival.

It's that decision that organizers said they will use to keep the two-day festival going.

"We expect to hold that as a precedent," said Bill Downing, MassCann's treasurer.

The event typically attracts thousands to the Common, but crowds were sparse as the second day of the festival opened. Some people sat out on the hill near the center of the Common, watching the crowds below weave their way through the vendors selling countless glass pipes, pro-marijuana hats and shirts, jewelry, hula-hoops and other items.

Meanwhile, Boston police officers and park rangers kept a watchful eye. Some officers

Freedom cited

While Boston police did not have a final tally of citations or arrests as a result of the Freedom Rally, it was clear that police were issuing violations.

- Bill Downing, treasurer of MassCann, said that he witnessed police issue citations to multiple festival-goers and that police told him officers arrested at least one person on a distribution charge.

- Downing also said that the organization hires a private security company to assist with issues.

questioned a group of four people sitting on the hill and appeared to be giving them a citation for possession of marijuana. Just yards away, Ricky, Leo and Lindsey, a group of teens from the South Shore, sat on the hill with Ricky and Leo passing a glass pipe.

Ricky, who like his friends did not want to give his last name, said he was nervous about getting a citation, but came out to enjoy the festival anyway.

Tsarnaev manhunt. Cop calendar in the works

The Watertown Police Foundation wants to create and sell a 2014 calendar from photos taken during the manhunt for accused Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev.

The foundation is soliciting "positive" photos that "highlight the valor" of police in Watertown, which was on lockdown until Tsarnaev was found in a dry-docked boat.

"While we will never be able to put into words our gratitude for what our police did, we can try to let the photos from that night in April speak for themselves," foundation board member Steve Messina said in a statement. METRO

If you found a backpack with $40,000 in it, would you turn it in?

A homeless man found himself in that very scenario and ended up turning over the bag.

Officers were flagged down by the man, who police would not identify, on Saturday afternoon at the South Bay Center in Dorchester.

The man told officers that he found the backpack, which contained a large sum of money and a passport, near the front of the TJ Maxx store at the shopping center.

Officers took the bag and the man's information. The man gave his address as one of the city's homeless shelters.

About an hour after the homeless good Samaritan turned in the bag, police received a call from security at the Best Buy store in the shopping center. Security

Cash and carry

Police conducted an inventory of the bag after it was turned over by the man.

- Inside officers found $2,400 in cash.
- Also inside the bag was $39,500 in traveler's checks.
- Besides the money, a People's Republic of China passport and various personal papers were also found inside the backpack.

said a man informed staff at the store that he had lost a bag with a large amount of cash in it.

Officers picked up the man at the shopping center and took him to a police station where he was identified by his passport and reunited with his bag. MICHAEL NAUGHTON

Assad government hails 'victory' in arms agreement, troops attack

Pact. The Syrian government has told the UN it will adhere to the chemical weapons treaty.

Syria's government hailed as a "victory" a Russian-brokered deal that has averted U.S. strikes, while President Barack Obama defended a chemical weapons pact that the rebels fear has bolstered their enemy in the civil war.

President Bashar al-Assad's jets and artillery hit rebel suburbs of the capital again yesterday in an offensive that residents said began last week when Obama delayed air strikes in the face of opposition from Moscow and his own electorate.

Speaking of the U.S.-Russian deal, Syrian minister Ali Haidar told Moscow's RIA news agency: "These agreements ... are a victory for Syria, achieved thanks to our Russian friends."

Though not close to Assad, Ali was the first Syrian official to react to Saturday's accord in Geneva by U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry and Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov. Bridging an angry East-West rift over Syria, they agreed to back a nine-month U.N. program to destroy Assad's chemical arsenal.

The deal has put off the threat of air strikes Obama made after poison gas killed hundreds of Syrians on Aug. 21, although he has stressed that force remains an option if Assad reneges. U.S. forces remain in position.

Russia still opposes military action but now backs possible U.N. sanctions for non-compliance.

Negotiations

Deal could offer lesson for Iran talks

President Barack Obama disclosed in a television interview that he had exchanged letters with new Iranian President Hassan Rouhani and said diplomacy on Syria, backed up by a military threat, is a potential model for negotiations on Tehran's nuclear ambitions.

In an interview on "This Week with George Stephanopoulos," Obama did not reveal details of the letter exchange, but made clear that U.S. concerns about Iran's nuclear ambitions are a "far larger issue for us" than Syria's chemical weapons.

Skepticism

GOP questions whether Syria deal has enough teeth

Leading U.S. Republican lawmakers voiced skepticism yesterday about whether a deal to remove Syria's chemical weapons could work without a credible threat of force pressuring the Syrian government to comply.

The agreement, reached on Saturday after talks between the United States and Russia, calls on Syrian President Bashar al-Assad to account for his chemical stockpile within a week and allow for international inspections by the middle of next year.

"If the president believes, like I do, that a credible military force helps you get a diplomatic solution, they gave that away in this deal. I'm really concerned about that," Mike Rogers, the Republican chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, told CNN.

ABC interview. Obama will deal on budget, but not on debt limit

President Barack Obama, in an interview broadcast yesterday, blamed conservative Republicans for a stalemate on the budget and insisted that while he is willing to haggle over taxes and government spending, he will not make a deal would that

With a possible government shutdown looming in two weeks, Obama said on ABC's "This Week with George Stephanopoulos" that it is up to lawmakers to work out a budget. REUTERS

Man fatally shot by police may have been seeking help

An unarmed man who was shot dead after running toward police in Charlotte, N.C., may have been just trying to get help after crashing his car, police said.

A woman called 911 after Jonathan Ferrell began knocking insistently on her front door at about 2:30 a.m.

Officers arrived, finding Ferrell a short distance from the woman's house. Ferrell started running toward them.

One officer unsuccessfully fired a Taser at Ferrell, but he kept running. Randall Kerrick, another officer, then shot Ferrell several times with his service weapon, killing him, police said. REUTERS

Another woman missing and feared dead in Colorado floods

The rain flooded out hundreds of homes in Weld County, Colo. / GETTY IMAGES National Weather Service. Some areas have seen more than a year's worth of rain in just a few days.

Colorado officials warned yesterday the death toll from the week's severe flooding could rise as it was confirmed that a second person was missing and presumed dead, in addition to four deaths previously verified.

The 80-year-old woman had been at home with an injury when the building in which she lived was destroyed, the Larimer County sheriff's office said on its Twitter feed yesterday.

Previously, authorities had confirmed that a 60-year-old woman was missing and presumed dead after witnesses said they saw her mountain home swept away. Their names have not been released.

Those two are among hundreds who remain unaccounted for, although officials said the bulk of those missing are listed as such because they do not yet have working telephone service.

"We're still bracing. I mean, there are many, many homes that have been destroyed," Colorado Gov. John Hickenlooper said in an interview with CNN yesterday.

Officials have already confirmed four deaths since rainfall began flooding the usually semi-arid region nearly a week ago. REUTERS

Poll: Five years after Lehman, anger at banks

Disagree. As many as 44 percent believe the government should not have bailed them out.

A few years ago, Larry Summers, then the director of President Barack Obama's National Economic Council, held a private meeting with some of Wall Street's top bankers and executives. Although the worst of the financial crisis was over by then, Summers — who until yesterday was a candidate to be the next chairman of the U.S. Federal Reserve — chastised bankers for being out of touch, saying they didn't understand how angry average Americans were with them, according to a participant in the meeting.

said, though she did not provide more specific confirmation.

Five years after the collapse of Lehman Brothers and two years after the start of the Occupy Wall Street movement, Wall Street has drastically changed under an onslaught of new regulations and by some accounts become more conscious of its image on Main Street.

Still, a new Reuters/Ipsos poll shows Main Street animus against bankers and their role in the financial crisis persists.

Obama accepts Summers' withdrawal from Fed chair consideration

A Twitter break up for Hemsworth and Cyrus

This can't be a good sign. In the wake of renewed rumors about Liam Hemsworth and January Jones getting cozy, Hemsworth's fiancée, Miley Cyrus, has un-followed him on Twitter, adding to speculation that the couple of four years may be in trouble. Cyrus has been traveling around Europe promoting her latest album, while Hemsworth was most recently in Las Vegas this weekend for the Mayweather-Canelo boxing match.

West gets charged with battery

Kanye West has been formally charged with misdemeanor battery and attempted grand theft stemming from his brawl with a photographer in July, according to TMZ. "We are very gratified to learn today that the L.A. City Attorney has chosen to criminally charge Kanye West," Gloria Allred, the attorney for Daniel Ramos, said. "Celebrities should be held to the same standards as anyone else, and we are very gratified that the L.A. City Attorney is not intimidated by Mr. West's fame and fortune."

Meghan McCain on her new show, 'Raising McCain'

Meghan McCain, 28, chatted with reporters on Thursday night at the premiere of her new docu-talk series, "Raising McCain." The cheery platinum blond says she is already bracing for the backlash. "The second episode hasn't even aired on feminism and it's already being attacked on websites, so I guess everything I do is controversial," she said about the series, which has McCain exploring various topics such as bullying and feminism through experiences in her own personal life and in conversation with other young adults. "People love me and people really love to hate me."

McCain's father, former presidential candidate Sen. John McCain, did pop up at the premiere (an hour and a half late, mind you) but didn't answer any questions. But that doesn't mean he isn't a fan. "There are things that I've said and done in the past that he doesn't love, but I think my dad would be more upset with me if I were a wallflower that didn't speak my mind," she told reporters. "I'm lucky — my parents are weirdly supportive of my career. I don't know why."

'Life is good' for the men of Gentlemen Hall

Success story.

The band sails by Canton on their way into the sun.

It only took Gentlemen Hall about five years to make it to the Grammys.

Granted, the six Berklee alumni weren't nominated for any awards. They weren't physically present at the ceremony. They weren't even in the same time zone. Preoccupied with the recording of a forthcoming, hotly anticipated EP, they hadn't even bothered to watch the show. Right up until their friends starting sending them a slew of congratulatory texts, Gentlemen Hall assumed that they had nothing at all to do with the 2013 Grammys.

Flash back to months prior, when Target approached the band about licensing their high-flying, mildly psychedelic pop jam, "Sail into the Sun." Gentlemen Hall gave the big-box titan their consent, and then, with only a vague time frame for when to expect the commercial to appear, they just sort of forgot about it. So, while "Sail into the Sun" was making its national television debut — in a big way — its authors remained oblivious.

"We had no idea it was on TV at this point," recalls vocalist Gavin Merlot, dropping a line from Brighton Center. "All of our phones started buzzing like crazy, to the point where they were, like, freezing up and locking up. Finally they cooled down, we could read the messages, and we said, 'Oh sh—, our song just aired on the Grammys.'"

Not that these globe-trotting festival regulars — who will appear on one of their most star-studded (and incongruent) bills yet alongside Hall & Oates and The Roots at the Life is good Festival this coming weekend — haven't experienced their share of awards and big-ticket cross-promotions. Readers of the Boston Phoenix voted Gentlemen Hall the best hometown band of 2012, in what turned out to be the alt-weekly's final Best Music Poll. Local Ben & Jerry's shops named a signature lemon sorbet smoothie in Gentlemen Hall's honor. But they were still psyched to hear about this most recent accolade.

"It's a really good feeling when you're in the studio making new music, and you're in a somewhat local band, but you can say, 'Well, this music will probably get heard.' [That] is something you question all the time when you're in a band," says Merlot.

Before too long, the follow-up to 2011's dazzler of an EP, "When We All Disappear," should be heard quite a bit. In the meantime, those following Gentlemen Hall on social media can expect temporary streaming access to preliminary mixes. The latest of those as of this interview, "Satellite," melds piano balladry with a downtempo, synthed-out and sexified chorus.

"Because of the limitations of starting out in a band, a lot of the time you're [recording] on laptops, without the capabilities to record a full band," explains Merlot. "The sound on

If this pending collection of jams does, in fact, echo a six-person ensemble more distinctly than the sprawling electro-rock scenery on "When We All Disappear," we're expecting a whole lot of magnetic pop euphoria. And maybe someday Gentlemen Hall won't just be the soundtrack to a commercial on the Grammys, but a nominee on the ballot for Album of the Year.

Weight Loss Research Study

Right now, doctors in Boston are accepting participants for a new weight loss research study. If you are overweight and between the ages of 21 - 65, you may qualify to participate. The study is for a reversible, minimally-invasive investigational weight loss procedure designed to reduce the calories absorbed after a meal. The study also includes a comprehensive weight loss support program.

There is no cost to participate, and study-related care will be overseen by a team of weight loss specialists.

The most famous musician you don't know yet

Herbert Grönemeyer likes you, America. Now it's your turn to give him a try.
PROVIDED

Sprechen sie deutsch.

Herbert Grönemeyer is a superstar in his home country, but he's starting from scratch in the States.

Herbert Grönemeyer is the most popular musician in his home country of Germany, having sold more than 13 million albums. But the venues he is playing on his first U.S. tour are decidedly more humble — and he's OK with that.

"You play in a way in front of people that haven't heard you before," he says. "You have to focus much more on the music and convince the people that night, and it brings you back to the roots where you actually started."

His sharp voice cuts through the fog of dark arrangements on his most recent release, "I Walk," which is sung in English. For a comparison, think Peter Gabriel or Steve Winwood.

"There's a certain melancholic taste to it," Grönemeyer acknowledges, "but I'm a very optimistic person and when we play, we're very outgoing and quite energetic."

The first song on the album is "Mensch," which he has reason to imbue with melancholy.

"I had quite a catastrophe in my life in the late '90s," he says. "My brother and my wife died in the same week. ... My father ... always said, 'The only thing that carries you through life is your friends.' ... I tried to sing this song to say that [my friends] really helped me through these days, and it proved right what I've always known in my life, and [this song was] saying, 'It's really great to be here and enjoy life and all this beauty, and the only thing that really gives it a shadow is that you're not with me here.'"

One friend who helped out with the English version of this song was Bono, who had previously appeared onstage with Grönemeyer to sing the German version of "Mensch."

"I met him through Anton Corbijn, the photographer, and we have been working on this Make Poverty History project for seven or eight years," says Grönemeyer about the U2 singer. "He was in Berlin and he came around and he was sitting on the sofa and just said, 'Play me some songs.' ... He was suddenly very into the album, and he said, 'Why don't you send me some playbacks? I'll try to hum something.' ... And then what came back was 'Mensch,' fully sung! ... So I created this duet out of it."

PAT HEALY

Lost in translation

Not going to hassle the Hoff

Grönemeyer says he is amazed by the friendly nature of Americans. "I like the positive, and almost childish spirit of America," he says. "It sounds disrespectful, but it's not. It's like you're friends until you prove different, and in Europe it feels like it's the opposite way."

One thing that Americans don't have right, however, is the perception of Germany's love for all things David Hasselhoff. "I don't want to say anything wrong about this, but it's more this American view that Hasselhoff made it in Germany," he says. "We have so many great artists from America who are big in Germany, but Hasselhoff, let's call him a kind of comedian."

'Dancing' pro Karina Smirnoff on her sizzling new workout

Fitness. Before tuning in to tonight's premiere of "Dancing with the Stars," learn how the pro stays svelte.

"Dancing with the Stars" pro Karina Smirnoff is running from a wardrobe fitting to show rehearsals when we catch up with her. It's only a few days before tonight's new season premieres and the professional ballroom dancer breathlessly declares her excitement: "It's a crazy week. The new show has lots of new elements that we are all learning. It's very exciting; it's going to be so much fun."

Anyone who has watched the show and seen Smirnoff in action knows that dancing can be a super-effective way to work out. Smirnoff and fellow pro Kym Johnson are behind the best-selling fitness DVD "Dancing with the Stars: Latin Cardio Dance," and are now back with its follow-up, "Dancing with the Stars: Sizzle & Groove Latin Dance," which was released earlier this month.

The DVD features Smirnoff and Johnson teaching exercise routines adapted from the show for a full-body, highcardio workout that anyone — even those with two left feet — can do at home and get results.

"Latin dancing is the most incredible workout and you don't feel like you are exercising — it's more fun than going to the gym," says Smirnoff. "You're burning more calories too. The testament is that every celebrity who comes on the show either loses weight or tones up and they always say that's the best part of doing it."

Unlike what you might be doing at the gym, Smirnoff says that danc-

Her diet

'Making good choices'

The Ukrainian native's workout routine includes yoga, which she calls "an hour and a half of pure torture!" Smirnoff sticks to a mostly non-meat diet, but otherwise isn't too rigid in what she eats. "I think that a healthy diet means making good choices. Having a piece of cake and then running it off is OK, but having a piece of cake before going to bed means it goes straight to your butt."

ing works multiple muscle groups simultaneously.

"When you go to the gym you really concentrate on single muscle groups. When you do yoga, it is repetitive poses. Dancing works every muscle, and also, you're not exercising at the same rate continually, so your heart rate is going up and down. It's great cardio. And you're having fun and looking sexy. It's the only workout where you look sexy," Smirnoff says with a giggle.

Series hopes to convince dropouts to stay in Television. A six-part show brings celebrities in as professors for at-risk students.

Students are starting a new school year, and one of educators' biggest challenges is keeping them there — and hopefully funneling them toward college. One new documentary, the Sundance Channel's "Dream School," highlights what they call a dropout crisis. The six-part series follows students as they learn from an array of celebrities, from musician and producer Swizz Beatz to financial guru Suze Orman and director Oliver Stone. The 15 Los Angeles students, all ages 17 to 18 — a pivotal age where students traditionally decide to drop out or stay in school — were either expelled or had dropped out, and each professor tries to spark their interest. We spoke with Dr. Steven Keller, a California superintendent involved with the series, about how the students reacted to their unusual education atmosphere.

What are some of the challenges of keeping kids in school?

First of all, family engagement. Moms, dads, uncles, aunts, grandmothers, grandfathers, need to hunker down with their family members and engage their family members. As a family and as a country, we need to take ownership of each and every kid to really push them and motivate them to get to school each day and check in on them when they get home from school, make sure they have some accountability when the kids get home, whether a potential dropout or not. The second piece, of course, is funding. There needs to be more funding specifically for kids that are earmarked as potential dropouts. We as educators need to look at restructuring and reforming how we serve this population. And then the last piece is, we as educators need to assess what works and what doesn't work and adjust and make changes and reflect on our practice. So there are certainly three layers to it that play into this.

What are some of the reasons students give for dropping out?

"My parents, my brother, my mom and dad, don't go to college, and they're doing fine." Usually the excuse a child will give — a student will give — is not reaping the monetary benefits, that they know plenty of people who didn't go to college and didn't necessarily graduate who are making plenty of money. ... [But] we know plenty of people who make a lot of money who are miserable,

Risk factors

What are some of the symptoms of someone who might be at risk of dropping out?

A lot of people look at traditional data. On the other hand, we look at other factors.

We look into attendance. We actually look at social emotional assessment with kids, to find out how engaged they are at school. Do the students feel a sense of purpose at school? [Does each student] feel he or she can express his or her opinion in class and to a school educator? Those indicators tell you a lot.

absolutely miserable in their lives.

Did anything surprise you in making this documentary?

I think the celebrity teachers genuinely wanted to connect with the kids. All of them really do. They were nervous, even scared. They would constantly ask for feedback. I'm not saying they all performed brilliantly, I'm just saying they all took their craft seriously. ... No one showed up thinking they were going to wing it.

What different types of styles did students respond to?

Suze Orman came in with business to make. She was ready to go, she was not going to play any games. You'll have to see. The students clearly respond to that style.

What do you think could most help students who can't participate in something like "Dream School"?

I think the most powerful message for potential dropouts is, find that person in your life, whether it's a friend who's achieving academically, family member. ... Seek out an adult, it doesn't mean it has to be a millionaire or somebody who has a great job, but somebody you admire, somebody you respect, somebody who does want to better him or herself, somebody who is basically hungry, who wants to move ahead and not just to have a new car or a new house but who really wants to change the world and make it a better place. Everybody knows somebody.

Can women really 'have it all'?

Industry pros have their say

For women, juggling careers, children and relationships is a full-time job. / MOODBOARD

Well-rounded. We turned to the pros for insight into this hot-button issue.

It's a debate that continues to wage war in our society, one that was brought to the forefront again with the release of Sheryl Sandberg's "Lean In": Can women really have it all? The perfect home, the darling children and the bustling career — can they be successfully juggled? And why is "having it all" a problem only women seem to have?

At a New York Women in Communications panel discussion on female leadership last week, women at the top of their game offered their opinions on the matter and advice for women trying to balance it all.

"You can't expect perfection," said Cathie Black, the former chairman and president of Hearst Magazines (who by the way abhors the phrase "having it all"). She referenced Oprah Winfrey's popular "Live your best life" quote, noting the importance of the word "your" in there.

"Life is about imbalance," she added. "There are choices you make."

One of those choices might be accepting that you can't do it all. Jeanine Shao Collins, the EVP and chief innovation officer of Meredith 360, recommended future leaders "be willing to delegate, and be OK with it." And Black added that hiring a nanny to watch the kids isn't going to make them forget who their parents are.

Dustee Tucker Jenkins, the VP of public relations for Target, spoke on the importance of saying no and being in a career you truly love to help ease the daily burdens. She recalled quitting her reporter's job on the spot after she was sent to cover a murder case and realized journalism wasn't for her. She also emphasized the role that others play in helping you achieve your personal and professional goals. "Lean In," in her opinion, she said, means, "lean in and grab the hands of the women next to me. For me it means trying, failing, getting better, growing."

Debra Shriver, SVP/chief communications officer at Hearst, echoed the "Lean In" sentiments, encouraging attendees to "be engaged, be direct, be in the office when you're in the office, but have a 360 life." She recalled attending a meeting she wasn't invited to (and then running it!) and joked that "on some days I lean in so much [that] I need to lie down."

Career tips

Black's one of the respected bosses in the biz. Take her advice and watch your career soar.

How to ask for a raise: "You have to have a reasoned approach," she says. "I need more money" — that is not my problem. Look at the results: Have you done the job really well? Then you can ask for something."

How to stand out in meetings: Black calls the corner seat "the dead zone of the table." Speak up! "If you are going to show up, you are not a visitor — you are a participant in that meeting."

How to get ahead: "We're so polite, wanting to be liked," she says of women. "Let's push that paradigm upside-down. I don't think it's about being liked. You're really not in the job to find your new best friends."

Take a kinder look at good old-fashioned GMOs

In a nation where biotech and pharmaceuticals are leading the world industry, it's appalling that there are such academic inaccuracies. Does anyone understand that scientists aren't actually piecing together slices of DNA to create Frankenfoods? Have you ever heard of corn? That is a naturally occurring genetically-modified organism (as in, it didn't exist 500 years ago until a random cross-pollination mutation of maize and wheat occurred, and we simply kept growing it.) When it comes to apples, genetic engineering simply means cross-pollination, and selecting favorable phenotypes (aka physical descriptors). They are specifically selecting the larger (and less flavored) to simply feed more people per apple. Genetic engineering in general isn't what its namesake and stigma lead most laymen to believe.

MATT BROSNAN, VIA EMAIL

Humans have been genetically modifying crops and livestock for thousands of years through selective breeding and the hybridization of plants. Genetic engineering is simply a much faster and more precise way of giving our food organisms the characteristics that we want them to have. Crops have been genetically modified to resist insect attacks, thereby reducing the need to use pesticides that harm the environment. Golden rice is genetically modified to contain provitamin A and is intended for distribution in poor, rural areas where nutrient deficiency is a huge problem. Sadly, some golden rice crops in the Philippines were recently destroyed by ignorant mobs who believed that GMOs were somehow dangerous. The spreading of false information by well-intentioned but uninformed people is surely a contributing factor to this sort of tragic behavior.

Dolphins join Pats atop AFC East

NFL Roundup. Miami is undefeated, the Bills got on the board and San Diego stunned Philadelphia.

Many are down on the Patriots despite their 2-0 start to the 2013 season. The long-basement dwelling Dolphins, meanwhile, will take 2-0 any way they can get it.

Miami joined the Pats at the top of the AFC East standings yesterday, courtesy of a 24-20 victory over the Colts in Indianapolis.

Ryan Tannehill threw for 319 yards and a touchdown and Charles Clay's 1-yard touchdown plunge in the third quarter helped hold off a Colts rally. Andrew Luck passed for 321 yards, completing 25 of his 43 attempts, while throwing a touchdown and a pick.

Bills edge Panthers

EJ Manuel got the bet of quarterback counterpart Cam Newton yesterday in Orchard Park, N.Y., passing for 296 yards and a touchdown, as the Bills rallied to best Carolina, 24-23.

Manuel's 2-yard touchdown pass to Stevie Johnson with two seconds remaining won it for Buffalo, which improved to 1-1.

Chargers upset Eagles

Chip Kelly was dealt his first NFL loss yesterday, courtesy of Philip Rivers and the Chargers.

The San Diego quarterback tossed three touchdown passes to Eddie Royal in a shootout which saw Michael Vick throw for a career-high 428 yards.

Nick Novak's 46-yard field goal with seven seconds left won it for the Chargers.

Chiefs take down Cowboys

Andy Reid improved to 2-0 as head coach of the Chiefs as KC edged Dallas, 17-16 at Arrowhead Stadium yesterday.

Alex Smith tossed a pair of touchdowns and had 223 yards through the air. Kansas City has not turned the ball over once so far in 2013.

Red Sox are the kings of working the count

MLB. The Sox are scoring a boatload of runs this season, in large part because of their patience at the dish.

The Red Sox lead all of baseball in runs per game at 5.21, which is a major reason why they have the best record in baseball and they're closing in on clinching a playoff spot for the first time since 2009. One of the biggest causes for their offensive success this season has been their ability to work counts and get opposing pitchers out of games early.

As a team they have seen the most pitches in all of baseball and have the second-most pitches seen per plate appearance. In working the count, Red Sox hitters are able to drive up pitch counts.

"It's one of the main characteristics of who we pursued in the offseason, [players] that have [patience] in their track record," manager John Farrell said earlier in the season.

"That is the approach — a lot of deep counts, try to get in the bullpen as early as possible. This goes back to a lot of conversations in the

The Red Sox have all but locked up a playoff berth, but the wild card race in the AL is going down to the wire. Tampa Bay, Texas, Cleveland, Baltimore, New York and Kansas City are the six teams all within 3.5 games of each other.

offseason on who we are going to target, and it's playing out."

One of those players signed this offseason, Mike Napoli, has been the epitome of what Farrell and the organization was looking for in terms of plate approach. As of Saturday, Napoli was seeing 4.54 pitches per plate appearance, which leads the American League. Napoli isn't the only one as Daniel Nava is 12th in the AL with 4.13, and Dustin Pedroia is 16th with 4.05.

Since Aug. 1, opposing starters have a 5.17 ERA and in 18 of the 41 games they have failed to pitch into the sixth inning.

As a team the Sox are 27-14 during that time and of the 14 losses, eight of them have seen the opposing pitcher go at least seven complete innings. The players know just how important their patient approach at the plate is.

"I think it's important," Napoli said. "We have a lot of guys who get deep into counts and when everyone is working together to do that it works. We've been able to do that all year and don't plan on stopping."

With this approach, the simple way to combat it is to throw a high number of strikes, forcing Red Sox hitters to swing early in counts, which allows them to pitch deep into games.

This certainly deserves monitoring come playoff time, as it will go a long way in determining how deep into October the Sox can go.

Danny & the doctors

Amendola could have a hernia

Hours before last Thursday's game against the Jets, it was still unknown if Patriots receiver Danny Amendola would miss any time due to his most recent injury. For Pats fans, something resembling the worst case scenario is playing out as Amendola missed the game against New York and is expected to miss the next two-to-three games, according to reports. FOX Sports reported yesterday that Amendola tore the adductors in his hips and it's possible that he has a sports hernia.
